Stephen C. Donehoo, Managing Partner of McLarty Associates, is based in Washington, DC. Stephen leads the firm's work in Northern Latin America. He is also the firm's lead on intelligence, national security, and defense related issues.

Stephen has advised dozens of clients on issues of strategic planning, government relations, and transaction management. His expertise is in the areas of monitoring and shaping regulatory and legislative processes; litigation support, arbitration, and settlement negotiation support activities; crisis management; risk assessment; concession/bid process support; hostage release negotiations; tariff rate negotiations; public and media relations; and motion picture production support.

Stephen is a former military intelligence officer specializing in Latin America who provided strategic policy advice on the region while serving at the White House, Office of the Secretary of Defense, the U.S. Southern Command, and the Army Staff. He also ran the Pentagon's Army Operations Center 24-hour Intelligence Watch where he oversaw crisis-action support teams for Somalia, Haiti, Bosnia, and numerous disaster relief deployments.

He is an on-air commentator on national security, intelligence, military, and regional issues for CNN en Español, NTN-24, UNIVISION, Telemundo, BBC en Español, Radio France International, and Voice of America.

A native of Walton County, Georgia, Stephen was raised in Colombia, has lived in Costa Rica, Panama, and El Salvador, and speaks fluent Spanish.
